

Exhibiting PAIN

Interpretations of creative representations of persistent physical pain

Autobiographical representations of life with persistent physical pain are being exhibited online using social media.

Interpretations and responses to the works will be used to show how different audiences interpret the works and what this means for the creative communication of persistent pain.

Hey Doc, Have You Figured It Out Yet?
By Mark Collen

'This speaks to me of frustration with repetition, and the circular shape tells me that it is a never ending cycle.'

Please share any questions, thoughts or responses by using a post-it note.

Do You See What I Feel? By Dana Harrell-Sanders

Please share any questions, thoughts or responses by using a post-it note.

'It's such a conundrum when people tell me how well I look. I want to look well, even when I feel terrible, but I also feel that when we look sick, we often get more sympathy/support/recognition.'

'Trigeminal neuralgia comes out of the blue like a lightning bolt... leaving the sufferers in a constant state of fear. When will it hit me next?'
Carol Jay Levy

Trigeminal Neuralgia Strikes By Carol Jay Levy

Please share any questions, thoughts or responses by using a post-it note.

Please visit:
Exhibitingpain.wordpress.com

And/or
Exhibiting Pain on Facebook.